ZEEGWON SHILLING

ANISHINAABE SINGER-SONGWRITER ◆ MULTI-INSTRUMENTALIST ◆ ACTOR

Zeegwon Shilling is a 20-year-old Anishinaabe singer-songwriter, multi-instrumentalist, and actor from Wasauksing First Nation. He taught himself piano by ear at age three and grew up surrounded by music through his parents' community radio station.

In 2018, a video of Zeegwon singing Leonard Cohen's "Hallelujah" reached more than 600,000 views online. He made his television debut the following year as a guest star on CBC's The Coroner, and in 2021 received the Johanna Metcalf Performing Arts Protégé Prize, presented in partnership with the Ontario Arts Council. He has since been mentored by Amanda Rheaume, Derek Miller, and Lacey Hill.

Zeegwon is now recording his debut EP with award-winning producer Hill Kourkoutis, set for release with Littlebit Records in fall 2027.

His music brings together pop, live instrumentation, and the influence of his Anishinaabe upbringing.
